* 印の単語や語句の意味は文末に書いてあります。

11% of the world's people are hungry. Do you think that there isn't enough food in the world now? In the UK alone, families throw away five million tonnes of perfectly *edible food every year. Another 1.9 million tonnes is *wasted by the food industry, such as farmers, supermarkets and restaurants.

In the world, we waste about one third of the food we produce, at a cost of around £ 800 billion every year. People are getting fatter, and four million people die because of it every year.

There is more than enough food in the world. We produce enough food to feed 16 billion people. (There are fewer than 8 billion people on Earth.) What we are doing with it is wasting it. People are wasting food in our homes and supermarkets and a lot of food is getting *rotten in fields.

So, if we are producing enough food, why do millions die from hunger every year? There are a lot of reasons, but money, climate and war are the big three reasons. The countries most *affected by hunger are almost all in Africa, Asian and the *Middle East.
